Q: Achieve Stable Session ID in PHP I'm following a very simple example on creating stable session ID in PHP. However, I'm having trouble finding a solution to this. My web server is required by the client to not use cookies to remember any user activity in the session. Is this possible? A: Use PHP's `session_set_cookie_params()` function to set the cookie's max-age to 0 (0 means "never", expires=0 means "always"). Or do the same thing using `session_set_cookie_params()` and `unset()`. This is currently the only reliable method (you should always re-read the manual for those functions, to make sure you understand what they do). HTH
